Course Description

One part of a two-part introduction to the discipline of sociology, this course provides students with the foundations of sociological theory, methods and historic considerations which are applied in SOCI 102. In this course you will be introduced to the sociological perspective, to theoretical orientations, to the methods used to study human behaviour and to the concepts that guide the thinking and research of sociologists. You will learn about the development of sociology as a field of research and learn various theoretical perspectives central to the study of society.

Underlying the discipline of sociology is the Sociological perspective. This point of view brings the world to life in a new and instructive way. You will learn about the role of society in your life and the lives of others. You will learn how the general social categories into which we happen to fall shape our particular life experiences. The sociological imagination allows sociologists to make connections between personal experiences and larger social issues.

You will be introduced to three major historical theorists in the social sciences: Karl Marx, Max Weber, and Emile Durkheim as well as contemporary social theorists. The theories will be examined by highlighting the historical context in which the theories were written as well as key concepts that can be applied to social issues today.

You will see how sociologists have helped change and mold the social world we know today, and sociology continues to be an exciting topic to study because it teaches people how they fit into the bigger picture of society. We can look at ourselves through a sociological perspective to see how we classify ourselves and how others classify us. This is an invaluable tool for living and working in an increasingly diverse and globalized world. While one aim of this course is to give you a sampling of the diversity of perspectives and insights in sociology, another is to introduce you to what all sociologists have in common—that they all approach the study of human behaviour socially. Our central focus throughout this course will be the question of what it means to think sociologically about the issues of our world.

Sociology looks beyond normal, taken-for-granted views of reality, to provide deeper, more illuminating and challenging understandings of social life. Through its particular analytical perspective, social theories, and research methods, sociology is a discipline that expands our awareness and analysis of the human social relationships, cultures, and institutions that profoundly shape both our lives and human history.

Sociology is an immensely challenging and exciting discipline. It involves the systematic study and explanation of social life, groups and societies. Studying Sociology can give you new ways of seeing the world, encouraging you to question aspects of it you had previously taken for granted. Sociology can provide you with the ‘tools’ to become a better informed and more socially aware member of society by asking you to think critically.

Overall course objectives:

1. Learn the sociological perspective & develop critical thinking skills
2. Develop (or enhance) an interest in social & political issues, and current affairs
3. To see key influences on today’s thinking by examining the history of social thought
4. Distinguish between the major sociological paradigms and understand their theoretical foundations.
5. Understand how sociologists go about studying society
6. Identify how the sociological perspective illuminates understanding
7. Evaluate ideas and debates using the sociological perspective.
